

Discussion Questions:

1. What aspects of the Access Framework are not being measured and/or included in policy discussions?
2. What innovative methods have you used to measure demand that considers different family needs, preferences, or characteristics?
3. How can we better measure demand from a family perspective?
4. How can those data sources, indicators, and/or methods be translated into data or methods state administrators can use to build supply that better meets family needs and improves equitable access?
